Book club connects author with readers

SUE TIFFIN

County Life Staff

A golden retriever might bark, and a phone ringing might be stifled under a pillow, but members of the Haliburton County Public Library's book club gather around their devices, ready for whatever outside interruptions come their way, and ready, too, for wherever the conversation that day takes them.

Today's meeting will be a bit out-of-the-ordinary – more so than it has been for the past few months when members have met online via teleconferencing program Zoom rather than in person. Alongside the fairly regular group of seven or so readers, on screen is Genevieve Graham, best-selling author of Canadian historical fiction including Tides of Honour, Promises to Keep and The Forgotten Home Child, which the group is gathering to discuss.

Graham has a particular interest in Canadian history, and wants to tell more of it. It was only 2017 when she learned about the corrupt British Home Children child migration system that took place between the 1860s and 1948, in which more than 115,000 British children were sent to Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, with many ultimately suffering profound abuse upon arrival. The Forgotten Home Child is inspired by these true tragic events.

Nancy Therrien, who is cohosting the meeting with Penni Chalk, says she isn't typically interested in history, but that the book made it "palatable." Cathy McMullen says she knew nothing about the "home children," and found it both shocking and moving, connecting to the story in part because one of the settings in the book is Peterborough, not too far from here.

"I have a different take on the book," said Jessie Geall. "I enjoyed the book, but my mother is a forgotten home child. So because of that, I lived through all of this."

The conversation is different now, even more personal, and book club members and Graham herself quietly listen to Geall's experiences, and those of her mom, who came to Canada at 13, where she was sent from Middlesex by ship as an orphan – despite having a father – to a farm near Flesherton to care for an elderly couple.

"My mother was very short, so she said the snow was very high, her coat wasn't very warm, she only had little boots," said Geall. "But she had to feed the chickens, and feed the pigs, look after this couple and scrub the floors and everything. She never talked about abuse, but she didn't talk a whole lot about her time there."

Geall said her mother's past wasn't known to the family as being negative.

"Because she survived, and she was very, very much a survivor," she said. "She came to Canada in all those circumstances." She notes that the story and the idea that there are other survivor children out there was of particular interest to her.

Graham said members in the social media groups of Home Children and their surviving family members are quick to be able to connect newcomers with information of their family's history, tracing roots and connecting broken links at record speed.

"Only two per cent of the kids were actual orphans," said Graham.

Jane Adams said she once worked at a psychogeriatric unit, where a man had become very depressed, finally sharing a story of how he had been a "Barnardo boy," living out west in a shed. Adams said he had always felt too ashamed to tell his story, even with his family.

"All those years, he'd lived 75 years holding that shame and that sort of silence and it just needed to come out," she said. "He just described a horrific time on the prairies." Eventually, he did share his story with relatives who were supportive, lifting a great weight from him. Adams said it had been a "really good thing for him to be able to talk about it with his family."

Graham picks up a thick binder from off-screen and shows it to the book club members as she describes her research for The Forgotten Home Child.

"All the characters I wrote about, everything they experienced was real," she said. "I have this binder and it's all surveys from descendants. I went through that all, and I took the most common...stories – but I put those into these characters so that in a sense they're not really fictional because they are created out of real."

The group appreciates that the settings of Graham's books are Canadian, set in places they feel so familiar with and connected to already. There are so many stories to write, Graham says.

"I'm most happy to talk about this book because in my heart, it's a very important story for people to learn widely," she adds. "When you think about the four-and-a-half million descendants, most of them have no idea about any of this, so it's such an important story. Personally, selfishly, for me it's great that the book has done very well, but overall, I think the butterfly effect of having it spread out and touch so many people that's what's made it for me, it's been so important."

Elly Malcomson says she finds it interesting the topic of the Home Children program isn't discussed much in school.

"When I went to school, which is longer ago than most of you, we did learn about it," she says. "I've always known, but I've never known the details. It's always sort of been out there, negatively. In reading the book I found it very sad but also promising for the future of all of these people. They need to be remembered."

Graham says she's never had this many letters sent to her in response to one of her books.

"I've got all the other books and I hear from people all the time, but I'm getting five or six letters a week that are coming Bestselling author Genevieve Graham connected with a meeting of the Minden Book Club, conversing with members of the Haliburton County Public Library's programming about her book The Forgotten Home Child on the afternoon of July 29. The Minden Book Club has been meeting via Zoom online, so Graham was easily able to join despite being in Nova Scotia. /Screenshot in, and some of them are so ... it is such a responsibility."

One woman asked for three copies of the book, signed for her, her sister, and a cousin, in memory of their grandfather. Their family had experienced years of trauma culminating in addiction as they dealt with what their grandfather had endured. Others tracing their lineage have told her they haven't known how a family member ended up in Canada by themselves until "all the lights just went on" after reading the book.

Graham said she's trying to get the topic covered more in the high school curriculum, offering to speak to classes about her research and the stories she's uncovered.

Geall says she recently said to her sister that they didn't ask their mom enough questions. The other book club members smile and nod, at opportunities passed.

"You never think [the stories] are interesting when they're yours," said Graham.

She shows the group a photo of seven-year-old Alice, a photo she kept near as she was writing the book. "She was seven, she was told to milk the cows, she'd never seen a cow before, she had to deal with all those things," said Graham. Alice was moved from farm to farm, more than a half-dozen times, experiencing physical abuse, sexual abuse, emotional abuse, being told "she was too little to do anything."

Quinn's story in her book broke Graham's heart, she said. He was based on a boy named George who was here for seven months before he died, working for a widow who didn't feed or clothe him, forced to work in the snow and developing gangrene. His coffin was found buried in a manure pile, his body bruised and having suffered trauma by pitchfork.

Some stories were happier – maybe like that of Geall's mother, as far as she knows.

"Overall I think it was an important story to tell," said Graham, from her home in the east coast.

"Isn't this technology wonderful?" asks Geall. "We can all be – I'm in Quebec, you're in Nova Scotia, you're in Ontario, and look, we're all chatting."

"It's been great for authors," says Graham. "My book came out in March and I had booksellers write to me and say they were just setting up the book display in the windows when they had to lock the doors ... Most of us are introverts and pretty much run away from any sort of camera, but Zoom has really changed everything for authors ... I've done a bunch of different visits across Canada on different tours and spoken to people but this way I can talk to lots of people who don't have to travel forever to try to get to it."

A mid-afternoon thunderstorm has reminded Catherine Wallis-Smith that her windows are open, and she apologetically says goodbye to rush off to close them, but the book club meeting is reaching an end anyway, and everyone signs off until next time.

Summer speaker on Zoom Aug. 13

Environment Haliburton! will present a virtual Summer Speaker event on Thursday, Aug. 13 at 7 p.m.

The COVID-19 pandemic has exposed the risks associated with our increasing dependence on global supply chains for everything from essential personal protective equipment to critical food supplies. The shutting down of large segments of the economy has also pushed many small, local businesses to the brink of bankruptcy.

Are there other ways to organize our economy to reduce future vulnerabilities to pandemics and other disruptions while building local economies that privilege social and environmental values as much, if not more, than profit?

Our 2020 (Virtual) Summer Speaker event is meant to help start a conversation in Haliburton County about building a more resilient, ecologically-conscious, post-pandemic economy that works for everyone, not just Amazon.

Please join us on Thursday, Aug. 13 at 7 p.m. for a Zoom presentation by Russ Christianson, a well-respected cooperative developer from Campbellford, Ont., who has

Beef on a bun, drive thru edition

Rotarians work to cook and assemble beef on a bun on Wednesday, Aug. 5 in the parking lot outside Rotary Park in Haliburton off Park Street. Although the annual carnival could not go ahead this year due to the coronavirus pandemic, the service club members decided to offer their popular sandwiches as a fundraiser for community initiatives. The food was delivered in a drive thru format in order to ensure COVID-19 protocols were adhered to. /JENN WATT Staff Cars lined up down Park Street to go through the beef on a bun drive thru in Haliburton on Aug. 5. More than 400 people bought one of the Rotary Club of Haliburton's sandwiches, which were a fundraiser for the club's community initiatives. Later that evening, the winner of the car draw was announced: Judy Neimann from Haliburton won $30,000 cash or a new Camaro.

Water Ambassadors golf tourney raised more than $30,000

Water Ambassadors Canada's eighth annual Charity Golf Classic raised more than $32,000 thanks to the support of the community.

With 84 golfers, 17 volunteers, the staff of the Pinestone and a collection of businesses that sponsored three hole-in-one holes and several challenge games, the fundraiser on Thursday, July 23 will fund close to 13 Water Ambassadors' projects, which cost $2,500 on average.

Water Ambassadors Canada is a faith-based, non-profit organization that works to provide clean water to remote, developing communities around the world.

Golf tournament co-ordinator Ursula Devolin called it a "great day."

"We are so grateful that you took the time to play and donate to our mission to supply clean water to those in need. Though we cannot do our usual mission trips, we are working even harder these days with in-country partners to help them meet the needs of their local communities," she said in an email to participants.

Although the winners of the fundraiser are the communities that benefit from water projects, the top golfers at the event were Roger Trull, Jon Vermeer, Leigh Bull and Darrell Stamp. Their win earned The Golden Pump Trophy with a score of 58 best ball format. The winners will have their names added to the trophy and will receive gift certificates for golf at the Pinestone golf course and

The Haliburton Driving Range as well as Rhubarb Restaurant.

Holding the event required some changes to reduce the potential spread of the coronavirus, including having one golfer per cart unless golfers were from the same household, to stagger the starts every 15 minutes, and to have golfers start on the back nine instead of the front so the players would progress their play towards the washroom facilities instead of away from them.

"This was a very unusual time to plan a golf tournament. We set everything up with stage one parameters in mind and we thank you for being so adaptive," Devolin wrote. "Hopefully, the new format and meal plan worked well for all of you. I also hope the day provided each of you with a little break from your work life, your COVID concerns, and troubles in general. Didn't it feel great to get out?"

With planning taking place before the event, organizers needed to plan accordingly to the stage the province was in when they started.

This year's focus was on how clean water isn't just for drinking, but is also for hygiene.

There were challenge games during the fundraiser such as Sink the Soap and Pitch the Poop to draw attention to this.

"Thank you again for making the water dreams of so many people come true! Wishing you all a fabulous summer," Devolin wrote.

Light pollution: your lake is at risk

TIMOTHY JAMES

Special to County Life

ONE OF MY fondest and most vivid memories growing up in Haliburton County was the night sky. Like so many kids, we spent hours lying on the dock gazing at the stars while contemplating the universe and the meaning of life.

Of course, we still do that today and it is still amazing. However, while I've always struggled to repress my uneasiness over sharing the dock with an unknown number of spiders, these days I also struggle to ignore the piercing glare of dozens of LED lights around the lake's perimeter.

During this year's Perseid Meteor Shower, the celestial highlight of the summer season, I was out in the middle of the lake to enjoy the show from my canoe, and honestly, the number of artificial lights on the water's edge made my heart sink.

OK. I like it dark so I can see the night sky. Maybe you're not bothered. What should bother everyone is "ecological light pollution"; not the light pollution that obscures the night sky (for star nerds like me) but rather light that points into our lakes, forests and eyes and is known to alter the natural regime of ecosystems.

It's true. The issue of waterfront light pollution on sea life is not new. In primary school I remember the plight of the baby sea turtle who would scurry inland towards coastal lights (and be eaten) rather than heading out to sea. But what about on freshwater lakes and rivers?

The Great Lakes Environmental Assessment and Mapping Project, an ecological think-tank, explains that waterfront lighting is very disruptive to freshwater ecology as well. At the very foundation of the food chain, it stops zooplankton from coming toward the water's surface at night to feed. It's no surprise then that it can also disrupt the feeding and reproductive behaviour of fish and birds.

Makes sense, since most organisms, even humans, have evolved internal clocks that are controlled by natural light-dark cycles and, these internal clocks play important roles in metabolism, growth and behaviour.

You may be asking yourself, why should I care about bugs and other creatures of the night? Well most of us are here because of our beautiful, clean and clear lakes; our own utopia for water-based recreation. But make no mistake, our waterfront slice of heaven only exists because of a delicate natural balance that humans seem inclined to upset.

Light has its place. If you need it to see what you are doing, be it work or play, knock yourself out. If you have security concerns, design your external lighting to be minimally invasive to your neighbours, the lake and the night sky. But if a light on your property serves no purpose other than to generate light ... consider leaving it off.

Top 10 ways to repurpose pandemic masks

ONE DAY this pandemic will probably be over. When that time comes, we will all have several masks that no longer have a job. The good news is, with a little ingenuity and creativity, they can be repurposed. Here are 10 ideas to consider.

STEVE GALEA
Humour Columnist

1. Donate them to any Hammocks for Hamsters-based charity.
2. Parachutes for mice.
3. Include them in a family quilt to remind future generations of "the good old days."
4. Use it to hide the fact that you still can't grow a proper moustache.
5. Reserve use for when you do something truly embarrassing in public.
6. Cover up that bald spot.
7. Beard dander catcher.
8. Wash them and wait for the next pandemic.
9. Keep them handy just in case it isn't a nude beach.
10. Wear them in restaurants as an on-board napkin.

Highland Grove Museum

One of the benefits of living in the Bancroft area is access to a quality health centre. Fortunately, Bancroft Hospital, although servicing a small mostly rural population, has a strong crew of professional and medical support personnel.

With the onslaught of this COVID-19 pandemic, they are particularly focused on public health. Since they are front line workers, coming in contact with possible infected people, they are particularly susceptible to this disease.

Certainly the hospital has received high praise from the public. The Highland Grove Museum realizes that history is happening before our eyes and wanted to thank the medical workers with more than praise. Perhaps a thanks that included science and education. That's what museums do.

Since the museum produces images on coffee mugs, it was decided that a complimentary coffee mug that thanked hospital workers with their name would be created. In addition, images from Scientific American Journal showing the physical structure of the virus and a comparison of COVID-19 to other historical viruses were printed on the mug. This virus has many different components and an extremely large amount of genetic material; it is ready for a fight against vaccines.

Once word leaked out that the museum was going to produce a "mug of thanks," several businesses wanted to be part of the process by dedicating financial support: Harcourt Sand and Gravel, B's Kitchen, Stone Grove Antiques and JMB Construction. This was a pleasant surprise. In addition, there was a request to thank the Bancroft Manor since they were equally involved in protecting their residents. Time to order more mugs for processing!

There are probably other businesses and individuals who would like to add some support to the museum's Manor project. Phone or text 705-448-1818. All mugs are produced in-house by volunteers.

A coffee mug is a simple item. It sits on a shelf, or beside the coffee machine. But it can stimulate and inform.

Everyone thanks the staff of Bancroft Hospital and Bancroft Manor.

Horseshoe Lake heroes save neighbour's life

SUE TIFFIN

County Life Staff

On July 4, just after dinner, Justin Bragg was sitting out on his neighbour Tyler Eames's dock when they saw another cottage neighbour, Paul Tantakis, head into Horseshoe Lake for a swim. Looking down the shoreline, Justin could see his parents sitting outside at their cottage next to the Tantakis place, and Dan Gerrard on his deck eating dinner next to Eames's cottage. Paul had built his Minden cottage in the early '70s, and John Bragg, Justin's dad, had been cottaging next door since he himself was a kid, so the little community along the stretch of cottages was well-known to each other. It wasn't uncommon for the 80-year-old Paul to go for a swim, along with his pool noodle.

"We looked away, and started talking, and then when we looked back, we didn't see him," Justin said. "My dad was next door to him, and he was sitting outside with my mom. He yelled, he just said 'help,' and then he yelled my name ... I was up before my dad yelled because I knew something was wrong. But as soon as my dad yelled, it just kind of clicked in and I took off."

It was Justin's instinct to run, taking off along the rocks, through the forest between the properties, where he jumped into the water to join his dad and Gerrard.

Brittany Tait and Justin Bragg responded quickly after their neighbour Paul Tantakis slipped under the water while out for a swim on Horseshoe Lake July 4.. Bragg jumped into the water to pull him to shore, and Tait, a nurse, initiated CPR and directed other neighbours through the process. /Photo submitted

"It was shock," said Justin. "I was talking to my neighbour and he said, you either do one of two things. You never know what it's like until you get into that situation. You strive, or you kind of hide.

And I guess my, I don't know what to say, but my mind just kicked into, 'Oh my God, I have to do something.' ... I didn't even know I could run that fast until something like that happened."

The men formed a triangle in the water, looking for Paul along the bottom, and quickly found him.

"We got him out," said Justin. "I was the one who had found him in the water. He went right to the bottom. He sunk. I pulled him up and threw him over my shoulder."

Gerrard helped Justin bring Paul to a boat launch, where Justin's girlfriend, Brittany Tait, began CPR. The two were up at the cottage for the weekend relaxing from work – Justin as a carpenter, Tait as a registered nurse at a long-term care home in Port Hope. When Tait tired, she directed the men to carry on, with CPR performed for about 10 minutes.

"The ambulance guys were amazing," said Justin of paramedics Aaron Turner and Matt Barr. "They got there in great time ... They did an amazing job."

Paul was airlifted to Orillia, and then taken closer to home, to a hospital in Scarborough.

Mark Tantakis, Paul's son, said he speaks to his dad every day, and had spoken to him only hours earlier from Pickering that day. Though he did worry about the risk of his dad potentially falling or hurting himself in some way while visiting the cottage alone, he didn't expect the call from his neighbour telling him his dad had been taken to the hospital. The cause of Paul's mishap in the water is still unknown.

"He broke his back last August, actually, so he's still pretty weak from that," he said. "That was quite something to have to recover from at his age. He was very weak and probably shouldn't have been in the water. I think it was just a case of, he got himself into a little bit of trouble and wasn't strong enough to right himself."

Though Paul's medical team were concerned about the potential for brain damage, Mark said his dad seems to be feeling fine upon waking up and being extubated.

"His voice was very, very faint at first, for the first day, because he was on the vent for so long," said Mark. "It was hard for him to say much."

We looked away, and started talking, and then when we looked back, we didn't see him.

— Justin Bragg

His dad's recovery he said, has been "quite remarkable."

"I assumed there was trauma to his brain, because he wasn't very responsive, but once the vent came out and he was able to stay breathing on his own, he was completely different, and quite responsive," said Mark. "He was asking for food right away so I knew he couldn't be in that bad of a state, if you're hungry."

Mark said though it's unlikely his dad will go out swimming by himself again, he'll want to get back to the cottage that's been part of his life for more than four decades as soon as possible.

"The cottage, that's his life up there, so he for sure will want to go up there as soon as he can, same way as what happened last year with his back," he said. "It took him many months to recover from his back, and as soon as he was well enough, he was saying, 'I want to see my cottage.' So I'm sure he'll be saying the same thing again."

Mark is grateful for those who helped his dad through the entire ordeal from the water through to the hospitals.

"I can imagine, it was a Saturday, there were lots of people there, everybody says it was quite the event that took place with everybody helping out," he said. "Literally, the way that everybody responded so quickly and they found him, it wasn't like he was under water for 10 minutes, they found him quick ... For [emergency services] to show up when they did, it was a perfect job by everybody involved, really."

Like Justin, he acknowledges the timing of the crisis.

"It was very fortunate. If it was a Tuesday instead of a Saturday it would have been a totally different story."

Justin said he was thrilled to hear that Paul was recovering, and off the vent a couple of weeks after the accident, having worried about him each day.

"It turned out the best way," he said. "I think after that situation, it's always been a family up there, our cottages, we've always grown up together and hung out, I think this has brought us really closer."

Though Justin is humble about his part in the story, acknowledging several times the group effort rather than simply his role, Mark said everyone involved in saving his dad should be applauded.

"There's not a lot of good stuff going on right now," he said of his reason for reaching out to the paper. "... I'd like some recognition for Justin for pulling him out and really everybody that helped out. They deserve to be recognized."

Rec facilities remain closed in AH

Algonquin Highlands' recreation complexes – the Dorset Recreation Centre, the Stanhope Firefighters Community Hall and the Oxtongue Lake Community Centre – will remain closed amid the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic.

"Upon review and discussion of a comprehensive reopening proposal regarding township recreational related facilities, it has been determined that all recreation facilities will remain closed until further notice," reads a release from the township. "The factors contributing to this decision include staffing, logistics, resources and most importantly, the safety of employees and the public in keeping with public health recommendations."

The Dorset tower will remain closed for 2020, as will the museums in Dorset and Stanhope, both of which are having construction work performed on them.

In July, the township reopened playground equipment at its parks, noting the equipment will not be regularly disinfected, and asking residents to practise appropriate hygiene as well as social distancing measures.

Intertwined

Wind twisting the lone pair of pines, their spines
intertwined,
as they huddle on their tiny island springing from rock, sheltered by Sky, ringed by waves of space that ripple out towards surrounding islands, larger and denser than this outcropping, sprouting from the centre of the Lake, the two pines, thin as pencils, the scribble of their silhouettes luring me, as I lean against the haunches of a boulder,
on the shore,
drinking in their solitude, alone, together, separated by the smallest splinter of space, wondering how the pair of pines breathe, sharing Air, shackled to their stillness and one another, for the rest of their lives, there, on the island, enduring scorch and storms and ice and Rain, weathering the seasons together.
A longing to feel the same Wind as they do, unharnessed and wild and free, nudges me, as my bare feet slap across the bald faces of rocks, and I dip my toe into the water, a cool contrast to the blue blaze of Sun.

I gaze out at the fleck of island, wobbling like a mirage before my bleary eyes, Wind tousling the pines, my limbs sliding into the Lake, pushing off the rocks, as the paddles of my hands part the curtain of green water, over and over again, my feet sprouting flippers as I slip beneath the surface, gliding, weightless, through cool clouds of space, as long as my Breath lets me, resurfacing to gulp clumps of Air and light, blinking at the scrub of island, that grows shaggier each time I resurface, the pair of pines, stretching taller than the scraggly sprigs I admired from the shore.
Back under, I plunge, feeling limbless, feeling free, my knobby knee that throbs before Rain, massaged by the silk of water, that guides my blind limbs and sealed eyes through waves of space, towards the tiny island, whose slippery ring of rocks

I lunge for with my hands, hauling my limbs up out of the water, that's warmed during my swim.
I stagger, dripping, up the rocks, towards the pair of wiry pines, their spines sturdier than how they appear from the shore.
I stand between them in the splinter of space that separates them,
feeling Wind and waves and Sun and Sky, fringed by rings of space that connect us to the surrounding islands as well as the rocks sprawling on the shore
I left behind,
the fragrance of pine weaving through Air, as I rest on a mat of green needles and breathe, imposing my presence on the island's solitude, envying the pair of intertwined pines that they never have to leave.

Chance encounter finds Kate Campbell face to face with the Pontiff

MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

If Kate Campbell ever gets a role that calls on her to act with shocked disbelief, she'll just have to take a deep breath, close her eyes and think back to that moment on July 27, 2002, when she came around the corner of a hallway in a Toronto convent and found herself staring straight into the eyes of Pope John Paul II.

She'll remember how time stopped, how everything else in the world instantly faded into nothingness. Nothing else mattered than sharing a few seconds of silent communion with a man who, to her, exuded a love so calm, so beautiful, that she was deeply moved.

"I saw an overwhelming strength and love," the 21-year-old actress says during a brief visit home to Soyers Lake on Sunday. "He was so sure and

Three national awards for The Echo

The Haliburton County Echo has added three more national awards to its office walls.

The Canadian Community Newspaper Association held its annual award ceremony earlier this month in Halifax and The Echo came away with a second and two third-place honours.

The Echo staff (including stories by Editor Martha Perkins and photos by reporter/photographer Darren Lum) joined forces in a submission of five stories in the Best Coverage of the Arts category for newspapers with a circulation less than 10,000.

The judge writes: "Originally, there was a tie for second place. Yorkton (SK) This Week and The Haliburton County Echo ended up with the same score and were not far behind the Sherbrooke (QC) Record (which came first) in the final tabulation. In the end, the nod went to The Echo because it offered a clearer presentation. Both papers offered strong arts coverage. Each covered a cross-section of the community, highlighting the activities of young and old alike."

Staff reporter Cathy Olliffe came third in the competitive feature-writing category for newspapers with a circulation between 4,000 and 12,500. The award was for her story on Jeff Pinney. "Cathy Olliffe, in 'The Lowest of the Low', layered her story of a man suffering from multiple sclerosis with questions about the medicinal use of marijuana, the callousness of thieves and the judiciousness of living outside the system."

Columnist Steve Galea earned his award hattrick for 2002 with his third-place finish in the Best National Editorial category for all newspapers with a circulation less than 10,000.

The judge says "Steve Galea takes third with a personal and alternative look at the tragedy of September 11."

Passionate from a human perspective, Galea allowed his readers to feel for themselves, rather than beating them with an emotional stick."

Earlier this year, Galea came first in the Ontario Community Newspaper Association's best humour writing category for his Echo columns. He won an honourable mention in the National Magazine Awards in the humour category as well.

The Echo would like to congratulate all of its fine writers and photographers for their contributions over the past year.
